
Japanese nunchaku team. They went to town on their nunchaku and proved to be stronger than all the previous record holders combined – the nunchaku break, or tamakae, being the hardest in the world. An enthralled crowd of almost 6,000 watched the men display some unbelievable techniques including swinging and spinning around their nunchaks and performing fancy footwork on a pair of stairs. “I’m not sure I’ll be able to hold out for three minutes,” said the youngest member of the troupe, Shuji Nakamura, a 15-year-old eighth-grader. Nakamura first picked up the nunchaku on the advice of his father, who was also part of the troupe, while doing judo at his middle school in 1d6a3396d6
